"2016 ended with FBI agents involved in cyber-attacks and leaks," New York Times, December 13, 2017. By Marcus Papadopoulos For nearly a year, Republicans and Democrats have tried to analyze the actions of former FBI Director James Comey, and now former DOJ Deputy Attorney General Sally Yates. Republicans have publicly accused Comey of leaking classified information, and Democrats of spying on the Trump campaign. Yates ordered government officials in the Trump campaign to be interviewed for obstruction of justice. However, the media is silent about another high profile case which involves the FBI, former Attorney General Loretta Lynch, and the current Deputy AG who was Comey's supervisor at the DOJ, Rachel Brand. Rachel Brand is the Deputy Attorney General who appeared at a special press conference with former Attorney General Lynch while she was being investigated for obstruction of justice. The United States Department of Justice has denied any involvement. While discussing the matter on this link, with the stated purpose of preventing Hillary Clinton from running the government, former FBI Director James Comey sent out a 'Dear Colleague' letter to FBI employees in October, with the subject line, "Restoring Public Confidence in the FBI": The purpose of this letter is to assure you that the FBI is making every effort to assist the government's pending criminal case and related investigations, and to speak directly to the matters you have been reading about in the press. 09e8f5149f
