We demonstrated that breast cancer cells homing to bone marrow stromal cells (BMSCs) promoted breast cancer lung metastasis, as they increased the percentage of bone marrow-derived myeloid progenitor cells (BM-MPCs), both in vivo and in vitro. Human BM-MPCs migrated towards tumor cells, and upregulated the expression of IL-6, which could be inhibited by blocking its receptors (IL-6R and gp130) or IL-6 neutralizing antibody. Recombinant human (rh) IL-6 (0.01-100 ng/ml) treatment increased the percentage of BM-MPCs, the migration of human BM-MPCs, and the ability of breast cancer cells to form lung metastases in an in vivo xenograft model. These data suggest that IL-6 secreted from breast cancer cells may promote breast cancer lung metastasis, in part, by promoting the recruitment of BM-MPCs.
