[Blocking calcium current in pulmonary artery smooth muscle cells by Bay-K-8644]. Bay-K-8644, a lipophilic dihydropyridine derivative, was used to investigate its effect on the calcium current in smooth muscle cells of normal pulmonary artery and smooth muscle cells of pulmonary artery with chronic hypoxia-induced remodeling. Adenosine 5'-triphosphate (ATP)-induced currents were recorded using whole cell patch clamp technique. We observed that, in contrast to the effects of nifedipine (10^{-6} mol/L) and nitrendipine (10^{-6} mol/L), Bay-K-8644 (10^{-5} mol/L) did not cause significant inhibition of nifedipine-sensitive calcium current in smooth muscle cells of pulmonary artery. Further, Bay-K-8644 (10^{-5} mol/L) had no effect on ATP-induced calcium current when coapplied with nifedipine or nitrendipine. The results indicate that Bay-K-8644, in contrast to its conventional calcium channel antagonists, has no direct inhibitory effects on normal pulmonary artery smooth muscle cells. It may therefore not be a useful tool to investigate the underlying mechanism of chronic hypoxia-induced remodeling of pulmonary artery. The cardioprotective effect of proapoptotic signaling in acute myocardial ischemia/reperfusion. The apoptotic machinery plays an essential role in modulating myocardial cell death during acute myocardial ischemia/reperfusion. However, the molecular signaling cascades that regulate apoptosis in acute ischemia/reperfusion remain elusive. Using transgenic mouse models, we previously demonstrated that a single brief period of ischemia/reperfusion in vivo can trigger apoptotic cell death associated with the release of cytochrome c from mitochondria and subsequent caspase activation. To explore the molecular mechanisms of this ischemia/reperfusion-induced apoptosis, we generated transgenic mice with Card-caspase-3 (Tg-Casp3) and the alpha myosin heavy chain promoter/Card-Cre (alpha MyHC/C e79caf774b
