Donate with PayPal - Donate today!Main menu Post navigation One of the first things I learned is that it is a cliché for a young, ambitious Englishman, such as myself, to say that he desires to be a writer. The cliché is wrong; there are many writers. What I desire to be is a writer who is accurate, honest, and able to say what needs to be said; such a writer could not afford to be the cliché. Why should I be accurate? Because that is how it is. There is only one way of knowing something correctly, and that is by being accurate. The “truth” is the method by which we can know. It is the method by which any kind of knowledge can be obtained. There is only one way to know something correctly: get it right. However, it is often the case that truths are misunderstood or twisted, which is what makes them untruths. I have found this to be true of some young adult novels: they come off as naïve
