Talman turned his back to her and walked towards the door. "If you're not going to fight back at least play some light music. Nothing has changed, you know." Even though Talman meant it as a joke, Vera cringed at his remark. "Excuse me," she said, blocking Talman's path again. "We're going to the parlor for that, right?" He halted in his tracks and turned to face her. "What do you care? Do you think I'll stay here while every nurse in the world is probably fawning over you or something?" Talman's skin went cold. "Good point," he said, and turned towards the door. "If you can't even stand me keeping it together maybe we shouldn't be together." "Hey!" Talman and Vera froze. "What?" Talman asked. "What the hell was that?" "I've spent half my life being the only one who cares for you! I've never received this many compliments before, right?" "I don't care about that! You're being creepy! I didn't think you could be this mean!" "Me? What about you?" "I never wanted us to be here in the first place! You're the one who's trying to manipulate me! Whatever happened to your easy going demeanor?" "I'm not trying to manipulate you! I'm sorry!" Vera lifted her fan, trying to cool down both of them. "Would you two just please stop? Honestly, what are you doing?" Talman and Vera resumed their walk towards the parlor, where the government officials had begun congregating. It was only a matter of time before someone came to check on them. Vera breathed a sigh of relief and crossed her arms, but Talman still looked haggard. The lights in the room seemed to dim out of nowhere. Talman stared at the door, feeling uneasy. "Who's there? Come on!" A loud scraping sound alerted him, condition is visual impairment. Haemorrhage is a rare complication after surgery. Here we present a case of intracerebral haemorrhage after pituitary surgery for acromegaly. A 33-year-old woman presented with visual problems and headache for a year prior to surgery. She also had been receiving treatment for diabetes mellitus. Magnetic resonance imaging showed a 3 x 2 x 2 cm lesion in the left frontal lobe. The pathological diagnosis was adenoma of the pituitary gland. She underwent a transsphenoidal hypophysectomy. The pathological diagnosis was a pituitary adenoma. Seven months later, she developed dementia and died. An autopsy revealed intra-cerebral haemorrhage in the area of the previously operated lesion. The cause of the haemorrhage was cerebral hypoperfusion due to the presence of hypertension. Neurosurgical and anaesthesiological factors were considered to be the cause of the haemorrhage. AT&T's new commercial for its U-verse TV service — filmed using a device with facial recognition software that can instantly track your facial features through Facebook — gave the telecom giant a lot of grief for their blatant disregard for your privacy. Today, AT&T walked back the ad and promised to make more “thoughtful,” and explicit, as in “Face-tracking if you don't like it” before it releases more commercials for the $
